Not illustrated. 1906 Excerpt: . exposures, some check plates are taken; I mean plates exposed just like the main plates but only during, say, half a minute; which plates are then stowed away, undeveloped, with the others. Now, before taking the exposures for the later epoch, these check plates will be first exposed, again for half a minute, and they will then be immediately developed. Simple inspection will then show at once ) The small additional image must serve the purpose of preventing any mistake in the chronology of the images. whether the images get in the right position and whether or not they are equally bright with those of ten years ago. If not then they will indicate what corrections in position and time of exposure will be necessary. Some of these check plates further will enable the observer to convince himself from time to time whether the plates keep sufficiently well. It will certainly be desirable to make the exposures at the two epochs both on the meridian or in the same small hour angle. If we do this the only systematic error that need be feared in the proper motions is an error dependent on the magnitude. By defects in the guiding the images of the brighter and fainter stars may be affected in a somewhat different way. If so, then the p. m. of the faint stars on the plate, depending as they do on the proper motions of standard stars of magnitude 9.0 or brighter,...
