Mr Stromeyer asked the diameter of the turbine. Professor Jamieson said that he did not know the diameter of a 50 H.p. one, but the outside diameter of the turbine casing of the 5 H.p. one which he saw at Chicago would only be about one foot. That was the one designed for 22,000 revolutions per minute. Mr Macwhirter said that Mr Morton might let them know what sort of boiler he used. He (Mr Morton) said that they required 87 lbs. steam per brake horse power per hour. That was something like 10 lbs. of water evaporated per lb. of coal. They did not find that the practice in Glasgow, and it would be interesting to know what kind of boiler he used. Mr George Russell said there was no mistake that this was a very peculiar engine, and that it was a sort of engine that at first sight seemed unlikely, if they looked at it from an economical point of view, but Mr Morton seemed to be encouraged to go on. He had heard about Parson s engine, and he turned up the back numbers of Engineering and found, papers on 4th November, 1892, and 28th July, 1893, by Professors Ewing and Kennedy respectively, who gave it a very high character. It seemed to be Professor Jamieson wrote to the Secretary that since the discussion of Mr Morton s paper both he and his senior day students had seen two of Mr...
