In 1911 the New Zealand Rabbit was imported from the island for which they are named (See Origin) and immediately became popular and now (1917) appear to be third in point of numbers and rapidly gaining on the two leading varieties, viz., the Belgian Hare Rabbits and the different classifications of Giant Rabbits. The National Pet Stock Association (since renamed the National Fanciers and Breeders Association), with Chas. S. Gibson as secretary, has been the most important factor in making the rabbit a success as a commercial proposition in recent years and the industry is now almost as well established as is the breeding of poultry and other small stock; holding shows in nearly all the principal cities of the United States and a few in Canada. HOBBY--Rabbit keeping as a hobby is both pleasant and profitable. While n...
