Excerpt: . chapter V. from the death of cardinal beaton to the suppression of the catholic religion. (1546-1560.) The sudden death of the Cardinal Archbishop of state of St Andrews was fraught, it need hardly be said, the death J ofCardinal with the most momentous consequences both for Beaton. Church and State in Scotland. The Regent lost in him, as he wrote to the Pope, his most trusted counsellor, while the Catholic party, who had justly regarded him as their principal champion, were struck with the utmost consternation. The hopes of that faction, on the other hand, who aimed, with the assistance of Henry viii., at the total abolition of the old religion, were proportionately raised by the removal of their most powerful opponent. The complicity of the English monarch in the assassination of the Cardinal, already sufficiently clear, is further evidenced by his correspondence with Lord Wharton, Warden of the Marches, who, immediately after Beaton s murder, sent him letters which he had received from his spies in Scotland,1 containing full particulars of the deed, and urging immediate action on the part of the king. A deputation was about the same time sent to Henry viii. from the conspirators to ask his assistance in holding the castle of St Andrews against the forces of the Regent. The envoys were favourably received, and Henry sent through one of them, Henry Balnaves, the sum of eleven hundred and eighty pounds to be Rebels in distributed among...
